Front photo: View of Disko Bay from the town of Ilulissat, in western Greenland, late April 2014. Ilulissat served as base of operations for a study focused on ice dynamics in the Jakobshavn Glacier catchment area. The glacier is one of the fastest-moving in the world, and its acceleration and rapid melt rates are contributing to sea level rise.

Photo credit: Santiago de la Peña